Maritime transport is the principal means of transportation in international trade, allowing massive quantities of goods to be sent at a very economical cost. However adapting port infrastructure to new ship sizes, the capacity requirements of world maritime trade and the subsequent logistics needs for Latin American countries imply an overall investment, purely in terms of new port infrastructure for containers, of around US $47,000 million up until 2040. This reveals a large potential market for new business and enormous opportunities for sector suppliers, as well as enormous challenges for the public and private sectors to update regulations and facilitate the corresponding investment flows within these frameworks.

In such context, TRANS-PORT 2022 - VIII congress and international exhibition for Latin America – is making decisive progress in identifying the various markets that allow projecting the development of this sector; which, in turn, contributes to the economies of the countries of the region, upon convening Chilean and Latin American entrepreneurs, suppliers and authorities in an ideal occasion aimed at the exchange of knowledge, experiences and technologies, as required by the sector.
